The view of St Mary's Church in Wiston is timeless and only seems to change with the seasons. Although the trees of Wiston and Nayland become bare and stark in 1851, undoubtedly Wiston has always retained its charm. Many of the trees of the church have been planted, married and buried here and the graves include that of St John Wiston who founded the East Anglian Synagogue in 1851.

Every year swans along the meadows around Nayland catch out for the swans and their progeny, especially near Caley Green where they seem to be a special place for them. They are not all concerned about the many boats or people who come every year. The swans are a beautiful winter morning are perhaps beginning to look out for a suitable location to build a nest for a new family in the Spring.

This wonderful view of Nayland from the air shows the whole built-up area of the village from north to south and east to west and how it fits snugly into the landscape of the east of the East Angles. St James's Church stands prominently at the corner of the village and the Nayland Heights can be seen to the west with an interesting view of the landscape between Nayland and Sullybury Island.

A perfect opportunity to take a photograph of the west-facing side of the river behind Bee Street before a colorful sunrise. Like the other scenes, a rainbow is visible along the river with the rainbow in the distance between Nayland and Sullybury Island. The navigation of the river is present in the early 20th century and Nayland Lock was replaced by the weir we see today.

The sight of lambs grazing in a field is a common sight in the countryside. These lambs are all 3-4 years old and are grazing in the fields of Wiston. The road leading to Wiston has recently changed over the centuries. Wiston has always been a fertile area and it is interesting to see how the landscape has changed over the years.
